Sea Lions in Central Park.

The eight sea lions at Central park are inst now attracting much attention. They were captured about a month ago on St. Paul's and St. George's islands off the coast of Alaska, and arrived here last reaching their destination in just six days and eight hours. They were badly frightened by their trip and would not cat anything at first, but they were nevertheless when they were set free in the cranes' pond at the park and found that the water was really wet. They plunged into the pool one after another as fast as they were released and speedily congregated in the center, where they poked up their long, shining noses at the moon, and beliowed "Ow! ow! ow!" with a mesculine. the lions at first preferred to hindfile forgether in the lassin, where nobady could get a good view of them. Keeper Sham non tried to rout them out with a long pole, but his efforts only resulted in setting the sea hons smarling like tigers. Several expedients were tried with a similar result. Finally an assistant preduced a family umbrella and holding it toward the lions opened and shut it as fast as he could. The lions gave a terrific chorns of "ows," which they changed to a prolonged snarl of "be-r-r-r," and with awkward, ungainly flounders clambered over the sides of the basin and hopped along the bank in great haste to escape from the umbrella.—New York Tribune.
